Burundi is facing a socio-political crisis that affects its economy. The vast majority of its population lives below the poverty line. Children are the most affected and are confronted to all sorts of violence. We are working with the Ministry of Justice to implement a restorative justice, which reintegrates children in conflict with the law into the society while guaranteeing their rights. We reinforce and support the actors in the communal system to establish a child protection framework which supports good existing cultural practices.

Our intervention

Child protection

We are putting in place a protective system for children through child protection community committees, centers and a national children's forum. Children who are victims of violence or in conflict with the law are thus taken into charge and supported in their process of social reintegration or referred to appropriate structures. We support these structures and the development of work tools. Therefore, an equitable access to basic services is created for the children.

Access to justice

We accompany the actors of the judicial system (police officers, social workers, rehabilitation centers' staff, justice professionals) through training in restorative juvenile justice. Children in conflict with the law benefit from alternative measures to deprivation of liberty and can follow psychosocial activities to prevent recidivism.
